ICDL Iran releases new curriculum to teach basic computer skills to adult learners

15 September 2015

From the beginning of spring 2014, ICDL Iran started introducing a new curriculum for literacy learners that are under cover of education by Literacy Movement Organization of Iran.

In this e-literacy program, it is intended to teach basic computer level of knowledge and skills to adult learners with low IT proficiency skills. Consultations were carried out through several workgroups.

It is supposed, the courses will be run initially as a pilot phase in five provinces. Results will be collected and if successful, the project would be implemented in provinces at the final stage.
